Resource Centres for Learning – Current contributions to the wider church beyond initial ministerial education

Each box below shows an area of our work. The ‘bullet points’ are examples of the sorts of work we do in these areas; they are not exhaustive lists; and we accept invitations to work with synods, churches, and groups of people with specific interests or needs on an ad hoc basis. The Resource Centres for Learning (RCLs) are there for the whole church.

Much of the time of most RCL tutors is devoted to Education for Ministry Phase 1 – initial ministerial education. Working on the average figures calculated by the URC for a ‘good working week’ (2010 General Assembly), we estimate about 6,500 hours are spent beyond EM1 by all the RCL tutors between them in a working year, plus more than 120 services of worship led in the wider church. The tutors travel widely, responding to requests from local churches and through Synods.

The number of people who benefit from this service is inestimable. We encounter and influence 100s of people every year with this sort of work, and through them 1,000s of others. So 30-65 people may attend various preaching events on each occasion at the RCLs, and they take what they have gained and preach, between them, 100s of services to 1,000s of people. One of the tutors might write an article for Reform, and we do not know how many read it and use something for their next Bible Study, Church Meeting or act of worship. We see all the candidates at Assessment Conferences, 100s of ministers at various conferences, 100s of people in churches we preach in and so on. We are delighted to be able to contribute in these ways.
